Roscoe Sarles, who won the race, missed equalling the world's record for 250 miles by a fraction more than two seconds, it developed to-day. His time for the distance was two hours, 25 minutes and 29 seconds, or 2:01 seconds more than the world's record, made on the same track last February by Murphy. Sarles' average was 103.2 miles an hour.

Murphy's record was made with a 300-inch engine, while that of Sarles was made with an engine of only 183 cubic
